Finance Director's Report

This being my first report for 1993, I would firstly like to report that the Rodeo conducted by your Association at Rosewood in February this year, financially, realised the best results for a promotion of this nature for sometime.

Over the Labour Day long weekend, I had the pleasure of representing the N.R.A. at the Mingela Rodeo. A tremendous crowd attended the two day promotion.

The Principal contractor, Mr. Graham

Smith, provided some of the best bucking stock I have seen for sometime and should be congratulated for the condition of his stock, especially when you consider that most of Queensland is at present drought declared.

It was pleasing to note that Steve Donneathy, Jeff Harth, Steve Rauchle and Tony Hecksher made the trip north to compete at the Rodeo, with Tony Hecksher winning the Bareback Broncs, Steve Donneathy tying for first place in the Novice Bulls and Jeff Harth placing third in the Open Bull Ride.

On a personal note, I would like to thank Graham and Elaine Smith and family, Dawn Ramsay and Delece Porter for their hospitality during my stay at Mingela.

Secretary's Report

Well, June edition of the newsletter is here which means we are halfway to the finals which is on 19, 20 & 21st November, 1993 held at Pine Lodge Equestrian Centre, Thomlands. The A.G.M. and presentation will be held on the 4th December, 1993 at Caboolture Bowls Club.

Unfortunately, Lismore, Caboolture Apex and Pomona Rodeo's have cancelled for 1993 season. We hope to welcome them back in 1994 season.

We welcome Rosevale as a new committee. Rosevale Rodeo will be held on 31st July and 1st August, 1993. This will be Rosevale's first rodeo and I am sure all members will support it and become a long running committee for future years. Rosevale is near Gosford and about one hour from Sydney. There will be a live band and on going entertainment over the two days.

Members, please remember that each rodeo is an individual rodeo. I would appreciate it if you could pay them all separately with the right amount of money, be it cash or cheque etc., as the entries are balanced out for each rodeo. Remember, if you don't pay your entries on the day of the rodeo you will receive a $5.00 fine and will not be able to compete till this account is rendered. If the account is not paid within one week a $5.00 fine per week will occur for the next 14 days and thereafter will be dealt with by the solicitor at the member's cost.

Please remember at rodeo's that I do not work 24 hours a day. If you have any questions regarding Central Entries, nominations or to pay nominations please see me in the office only. It is up to you to come to the office during the rodeo to pay for your nominations and during lunch break the office will be closed. Whilst I am out of the office I am busy mixing with friends and would appreciate any questions to wait till I am back in the office. Thank you all.

Once the second half of the rodeo starts, I am doing payouts and accounting. If you can, please pay your nominations in the first half, as prize money payouts are important and it is easy for distractions to lead to mistakes. Once the rodeo has finished I will not be excepting any more nominations, regardless, no exceptions. Arrangements will have to be made by you for payments. Thanks for understanding.

Kevin Kasper and Brian Elliott are running a steer wrestling school on 10th & 11th July. It would be good to have more schools on events, as a lot of members new and old are looking at improving more by going to schools in which we don't have enough of, so let's support the ones there are.

My father wrote the "Poem of the Month" which refers to a pony of mine. I still have my pony "Banjo". I have had him for about ten years. He is the horse I learnt to ride on. Banjo is at Doc's place now, where Dale and I live. We still have fun on him in the arena. You will all be happy to know Banjo still has a lot of life in him and is going on strong.

All the best for the month of June, and safe travelling. Remember the finals are getting close.

Catcha next month,

Patty Kelly
SECRETARY
National Rodeo Association

POEM OF THE MONTH

PATTY'S HORSE BANJO

*I love my little horse called Banjo,
He all belongs to me.
And when I sit upon his back,
I'm proud as I can be.*

*Mum says he's got a stubborn mind,
But I'm sure that isn't so.
Because he's been standing up all day,
And feels too tired to go.*

*It's not his fault he's lazy,
And a little too tired to run.
He just likes to eat,
And take it easy in the sun.*

*When I finally get him going,
And ride him down the track.
I know he must get tired,
'Cause I have to lead him back.*

*Mum says he's a donkey,
But I don't believe that's right.
Just because his ears are long,
And he looks a funny sight.*

*But I don't care, he's my horse,
I'm proud and love him so.
I brush and pat and cuddle him,
So who cared if he won't go.*

Girls on the Rodeo

Most people don't associate women with the hard riding, hard drinking image of the rodeo rider, but the truth is that there are quite a few females on the rodeo circuit- and not just wives and girlfriends. Chris Brockie was at this years national finals in Tamworth and gave us this account of the cowgirls of the rodeo.

Tania Schiller, 24, has yet to pick her "victim". Like her sister Vicki, 28, her lifestyle leaves little space for permanent romance, or marriage. And it's not because Tania would be "pretty hard to put up with at times", either.

From Wagga, NSW, both girls spend much of their time driving around Australia in an Isuzu truck. They are professional rodeo contestants-cowgirls-members of the Women's Professional Rodeo Association (WPRA).

Although coming from a rodeoing family (their father was pro-rodeo competitor), it was not until the start of 1988 season that the girls decided to uproot themselves from family and friends to travel the rodeo circuit full time.

At 16, Cloncurry schoolgirl Norma Snelling has her heart set on travelling the circuit full-time in 1990, while the quiet, somewhat shy 21-year old Jo-Anne Bate from Ipswich, Qld, wants to go the United States to compete.

All four girls were among those to qualify for the National Finals Rodeo held at Tamworth earlier this year.

Vicki Schiller, who won the coveted All Round Champion Cowgirl title, has qualified for the NFR ten times, sister Tania four times. For Norma and Jo-Anne, this was their first.

Each year the Australian Professional Rodeo Association (APRA) sanctions and affiliates some 200 rodeos around Australia with total prize money for both the men's and women's events exceeding $1m.

Generally considered a male domain, it was not until Boxing Day 1967 that the Girl's Rodeo Association (now the WPRA) was formed amid the dust and action of the Myrtleford, Victoria, rodeo.

Previously, the wives and girlfriends of competing cowboys worked in the background, exercising, roping and steer wrestling horses, massaging aching muscles, or just generally helping out. In the United States and Canada the women were already competing in their own events. They were seen as integral part of the rodeo, adding colour to and glamour to the dangers faced by the men.

The first - and still most popular - event for the women was the Barrel Race. Seen at many pony clubs and gymkhanas it is a race against the clock, taking the horse in a cloverleaf pattern around three barrels.

With the advent of the GRA, barrel racing soon became a professional sport, and an expensive one, too, with horses costing up to $8,000 and $10,000 each. In those early years, the barrel race was often used as a fitter between the men's rodeo events. Spectators and cowboys alike seldom watched or took any interest in the events. Today, however, many cowboys are actively involved in the event as they now recognise the important role their wives and girlfriends play.

The men have also become involved in helping the women since the addition of Breakaway Roping. (There are several other events for women, but it's the roping and barrel racing which are most popular.)

Unlike the US, however, there are no bull riding or bronc events for women. Although Jo-Anne Bate confesses riding bulls would be okay: "I wouldn't mind it, it'd be alright," she said "although I don't think I could go up now and start bull riding. It'd take a lot of practice." Smiling, Jo-Anne adds: "Years ago I thought it'd be alright, but I think I'm getting a bit more sense now."

Sexism has little place in rodeo. It is probably the only place where women's liberation and affirmative action are of no consequence. Recognition has always been merit based and you need not be a champion. Triers are as equal as anyone; you are recognised for what you do, not how well you do it.

Asked if there should be joint competition, Tania Schiller is adamant: "No!".

"It'd bring women down," she said.

"We obviously couldn't compete with the standard of the men in (for example) riding bulls." Vicki adds, "even if they did have it (bull riding) here you wouldn't get many (girls) in it." However, with the advent of Breakaway Roping there is an opportunity for mixed competition.

In Breakaway Roping, the rope (lasso) is designed to 'snap away' from the saddle iron once the calf is caught. (In the men's calf roping the calf must be roped and tied). But because many of the girls practise with their husbands and boyfriends it is not unusual, particularly in Queensland, to see mixed teams competing in team roping events where the ropers must catch a steer by the horns and heels.

According to Vicki, "The girls just wanted to do it. They rope at home with their husbands and boyfriends in practice."

Norma Snelling tried her hand at Breakaway Roping, without much success. "I roped my horse and myself - everything except the cow," she said, laughing.

Like their male counterparts, professional rodeo cowgirls endure many privations in their quest for national titles. Travelling up to 120,000 kilometres a year, they suffer broken bank accounts, broken relationships and broken dreams.

Until recently with increased professionalism in the sport and its promotion, an uneducated, unappreciative public lumped all rodeo contestants into one barrel: bums. The girls were often considered less than virtuous - gallivanting around the country in trucks and spending time in bars with a bunch of blokes to whom a lady's virtues meant nothing.

Such an impression is wrong.

There is a closeness amongst all rodeo people - the nature of the sport dictates it - which invariably sees them relaxing together.

The reality is that most only drink once the rodeo has finished. It is a bit like going to the pub after a day's work in the office.

"A lot of time we'll have a girls night out and we just have a ball. We'll (cowgirls and cowboys) always end up at the same place in the end because you really know who your friends are."

Most of the girls would prefer to settle down with a cowboy or someone associated with rodeo. Many are already married to or engaged to cowboys.

Jo-Anne Bate, who is going out with a rodeo clown, a bullfighter, said, "It would be really hard if you were with someone else who didn't rodeo. It'd be hard for them to understand."

For Vicki Schiller, the man she settles with would be, "Someone to do with cowboys or farming", while her sister, Tania, said; "Probably would be a cowboy, I'm not sure. I haven't picked a victim. I guess I'd be pretty hard to put up with at times."

Reflecting on the image people have of rodeo contestants, Vicki believes they have the wrong idea because people don't understand their way of life.

"They've got a bad image of the rodeo world because they think the cowboys drink heaps and are after all their women. There's only a minority that are like that," she said.

"People go to places and are not really game to show what they fell. Cowboys and cowgirls don't seem to care what others think about them.

"They just go and do what they feel like doing, whether other people like it or not."

Tania added that, from the cowboys' perspective, it's not so much them chasing women as the reverse. In the music industry they're called "groupies". In rodeo they're "buckle bunnies".

Tania said, "It's more the local girls trying to hit on the fellers."

The girls are a tight group. They often know each other's secrets. "We have a lot of jokes amongst ourselves, little things we know about each other; at certain times we'd bring them up and have a little laugh," Tania said.

It is often said that once you get a group of women together in one place it doesn't take long for them to start bitching. In rodeo, given that they travel, work and play together, it would be reasonable to assume there would be heaps of bitchiness among the girls.

Certainly, there is the occasional bitch session – that's life – but in general they all get on exceptionally well. They also give each other space.

Jo-Anne said she tries not to get too close to most of the other girls. "I'm friends with all of them but I stick to myself a lot," she said.

Tania Schiller agrees there is some bitchiness among the girls but adds, "They just all seem to stick together at the times when you need them. Everyone just comes together. If there's anything wrong in your life there's always someone there."

So tight is the group the girls will put up mental barriers – perhaps to their detriment – when approached by outsiders, particularly men.

Part of the reason for these barriers is image protection. As Tania said: "If strangers come up to talk to you, you couldn't offer them too much until you get to know them; that's another way you can get a bad name."

Yet, perhaps it's because people not only feel intimidated by a group of cowboys and cowgirls, but also that men are not willing to attempt to meet the cowgirls because of the protective shield of cowboys which surrounds them.

In the 12 months Vicki Schiller has been on the circuit full-time, she can't recall ever being hit on by a non-rodeo male.

As a director of the WPRA, Vicki is more than conscious of the need to break the image people have of the cowgirls, and of rodeo generally. And she sees public education through the media as the only effective way.

The problem is that the media, for whatever reason, don't fully recognise rodeo as a sport – a professional sport.

Tania believes the crowds, although enjoying the spectacle of professional rodeo, don't take them as seriously as they should. "To a lot of people you're just one of the numbers ... what I'd like to see is more individualism, a lot more promotion of certain people; profiles done and the people really promoted in the sport so if people go to a rodeo they'll say there's Dave Johnstone or there's Robert McPhee."

People who regularly visit pubs and clubs where Sky Channel is broadcast are already being treated to rodeo action on Sunday nights. All the girls believe much more is needed.

"You can go all summer long and they've got golf and tennis and all that, but to me rodeos are taboo. Television doesn't want to touch it because of different things involved with it, like the animal libbers and all that sort of stuff," said Tania.

Vicki believes part of the reason is that rodeo doesn't have the money, the sponsorship that golf, tennis and other sports have.

Jo-Anne finds that when she has a job, most people, while interested in her being a cowgirl, have little understanding of what she does.

"I find most people are pretty interested, really. They like to know more about it but they don't understand. Tell them you do rodeos and they say, 'Oh, do you ride bulls or broncs?'"

Rodeo, to all its adherents, is a way of life. It's a sport that gets in your blood and once there it's like a virus that just keeps attacking the system.

Jo-Anne has been riding horses since she was five. At 15 she began rodeoing in south-east Queensland, and two years later joined the ranks of the WPRA.

Going into the 1988 National Finals Rodeo she was fifth in the Senior Rookie Standings, but only qualified for the NFT in one event, Breakaway Roping.

To her, rodeo is a "love" and to prove it she gave up a regular job to travel the circuit full-time.

"I don't think I'm crazy, I just love rodeos," Jo-Anne said. "I seem to just keep coming back all the time ... you start barrel racing and roping and you think there's nothing better to do."

When she was just nine years old, Vicki Schiller won her first money ($25) in professional rodeo. Tania was 11 when she began competing professionally. She too won about 25 dollars in her first year. "I felt really special," she said.

"You are recognised for what you do, not how well you do it"

Although consistent NFR qualifiers, the Schillers did not begin rodeoing full-time until the start of the 1988 season.

"We quit our jobs and competed full-time because we both had a good start to the season. We decided that, well, if you get a good start you've got to go and see what you can do, Vicki said.

"We'd never seen all the country before – now we've been everywhere: Queensland, the Territory ... I've been to WA this year, South Australia, Victoria. The only place I haven't been this year is Tasmania.

Tania added: "It's always been in our family, in us. It's bred in us. It's just something we've always wanted to do.

You get a lot of satisfaction out of what you're doing. You meet a lot of really good people. You have to go a long way before you'd find better people than those in rodeo."

Like everyone else who competes in rodeos, the girls spend many long hours driving. They all have to cart horses.

Luckily, Norma Snelling, the young Cloncurry schoolgirl, holder of several Queensland rodeo titles and the 1988 Junior Rookie Champion, has the support of her parents, for the moment. Her father spends hours driving while she year, 1990, she hopes to buy her own truck and rodeo with her older sister, Leonnie.

For Jo-Anne Bate, the travelling is hard but enjoyable. In her first full-time year, she said: "It was hard because I'd never travelled like that before. I used to travel five hours to a rodeo, five hours home again. It's a long way with five people in the truck.

"I rather like it, camping in a truck. I guess you'd get sick of it if you did for too long, but I rather like it.

"The travelling gets to you a bit, but you want to rodeo you sit there and drive."

Vicki and Tania drive themselves. For part of the season they hauled a caravan behind the truck but an accident "up north" damaged the A-frame. They now sleep in swags – canvas bedrolls – in the back of their Isuzu.

Although Vicki does most of the driving, Tania gets a sense of pride out of what they do. "To know that it's us two girls and that we can handle it on our own. We've been luck with breakdowns, we haven't had too many," she said with obvious pride.

Both girls were laboratory assistants at a Wagga meat cannery before rodeoing full-time. What they earned on the circuit, about $28,000 between them, is less than the jobs paid.

From their winnings, they had to pay all travel costs, feed themselves and their horses, and pay entry fees in each event at the rodeos they competed. Even qualifying for the NFR doesn't exempt them from paying entry fees which, this year, were $107 for the Barrel Race and $67 for the Breakaway Roping.

Despite Vicki's desire to compete full-time – "It's been a dream of mine since I was a little girl" – 1988 was tough financially; costing her more to travel than she won. In Queensland she sold a horse to defray costs and worked as a meat packer. "We're still behind," she said.

Most of the girls have to find work while travelling the circuit. Mostly it's seasonal, fruit picking or meat packing. "That's what we did in Victoria, we picked tomatoes then we went back home for a while."

Vicki said: "It was harder when we went north because we couldn't get much work. The best place was Charters Towers where we worked in the abattoirs for a few weeks."

Because money is always tight, even when they're winning the girls need a bit of business sense.

"You need to have a bit to plan out what rodeos you're going to do; where's going to pay the best; how many miles are involved; can you go somewhere that's going to be cheaper but more money," Tania said. "You've got to be able to plan for the times when you're not winning, when you haven't got any money."

But rodeo life is such that when they need money a contestant need only ask another. It'll be lent without question, without knowing when it will be paid back but knowing it will be, eventually.

In rodeo they look after their won. No one is going to see you stranded or stave on a park bench.

To Vicki and Tania Schiller, Jo-Anne Bate and Norma Snelling there is no other life they would rather lead.

As Norma, whose teachers tell her she has the brains to do something better, puts it: "What's the use, I may as well do what I like ... in rodeo you can be what you want, be yourself."
